After the elections in Congo, the grandson of Mugambi got named president.

On the 1th July a loyalist army major broadcast a message urging resistance from a radio station in Bunia in eastern Congo: "People must bring a machete, a spear, an arrow, a hoe, spades, rakes, nails, truncheons, electric irons, barbed wire, stones, and the like, in order, dear listeners, to kill the Rwandan Tutsis. This spiraled the already unstable situation out of control.

Some Tutsis picked up arms to fight back

Angola supported by the United Nations stepped in on a Peace Enforcing mission. They could not prevent several public lynching's in the streets of Kujari

After requesting assistance from the UN, the British Government has send the LRG to support the peace enforcing mission.

A UN panel of experts investigated the illegal exploitation of diamonds, cobalt, gold and other lucrative resources in the Congo. The report accused the Chinese of systematically exploiting Congolese resources and recommended onsite investigation.
